

Alice in Chains fails to show up for Met concert

Alice in Chains was a no-show for their sold-out concert Wednesday at The Met.

The Seattle hard rock group canceled their entire Northwest tour late Tuesday, although word was not widely spread until Wednesday morning. No reason was given, although the group had just come off another tour and, according to some sources, members of the band were exhausted.

Michael Smith of The Met said he is trying to re-schedule the show for Nov. 16, although nothing is firm.

Refunds are available through G&B Select-a-Seat, although Jack Lucas of G&B advised ticketholders to "hold tight" until they see if the show will be re-scheduled.
